Some people believe all components of the universe are linked by hidden affinities and that the kismet of one individual can bond with the destiny of another, each one the protagonist of their own drama, yet linked to another. Coincidence or fate? Across space and time, four troubled souls ask this question.

Mackenzie Chapman, born into wealth and abandoned at birth, spent her childhood seeking validation, moving into adulthood and the financial world as an introvert, extraordinarily competent and high functioning, but not someone anyone really knows. Using systematic logic to solve a mystery long buried, she travels across the country only to have her organized life fall apart and intertwine with strangers.

In one deciding moment, the life of Doctor Peter Farrell, handsome, compassionate and charismatic, hangs by a thread as he fights to live. Months pass before his quest to regain what was lost—his prayers for what once were—answered. Strong and determined, he succeeds, only to be blindsided by strangers despite for his help.

Ten-year-old Joshua and his tiny sister, Annie, are orphaned, then abandoned. Abused by a social system that exists to protect them, they cling to each other in fear and doubt until one rainy night, fate steps in.

Or was it just a coincidence that an unknown person, a woman with golden hair and a gentle voice, heard their cry for help and reached out to them without thought or reason?

About The Author: A Journey To Another Place. International best-selling author, Barbara J. Duell loves to travel around the world, sometimes without ever leaving her home. A history buff, she continues to seek answers as to how we got to where we are today, how different civilizations have changed, usually due to the impact of war.

Barbara can be found each day at her computer, laughing, or crying, just tagging along wherever her characters decide to take her. Barbara has lived by the sea, high in the pine forest where eagles soar, in a valley near the river's edge, and now resides in the delicate land of the southwestern desert.

M/W Flight, a renowned photographer, has spent the last fifteen years shooting war in the killing fields around the world, traveling light—her camera, a 45 semi-automatic, and a bundle of film, tucked in her backpack. She's suffered physical wounds and mental anguish, dodging bullets and harassment as she documented the devastation of human life. But on a dreary morning just one day in the summer of 1975, Mark finds himself crushed in the limits of endurance while filming the genocide in Bosnia, and her back goes out.

Recently wounded, she's evacuated to Landstuhl Medical Hospital in Germany, and her life hangs in limbo until trauma surgeon Neil Baker takes over her care. The common sense and caution have never been her way of life. Butly Able to walk, Mark defies her doctors' demands that she remain still, and her actions will unravel her, even after the storm, however only to be caught up in a different kind of war that has touched the hearts of his American, the obvious enemy kids that fight for survival, live with the world he despises.

Captain Neil Baker, trauma surgeon, has dedicated his life to medicine. He's fought major and minor operations in field hospitals never far from the ongoing battle lines where the wounded remain, and too many die or go mad.

Evacuated to Landstuhl, he faces another kind of anguish. Come see the battlefield, but not the wounded who arrived daily, more by truck and train, demanding he put aside his personal life until one night a woman arrives, afflicted from the ravages of Cambodia—no memories, broken and bewildered—his skills no longer put to the test.

Doctor/patient relations take on a new meaning as he disappears present and becomes emotional and frustrated by the tall female who possesses the gift of life. But it's Mark's own search that drives him, wild and dark his desire. Mark's other means looking to her, promises are broken, love put in jeopardy by her determination to die the hero's death.

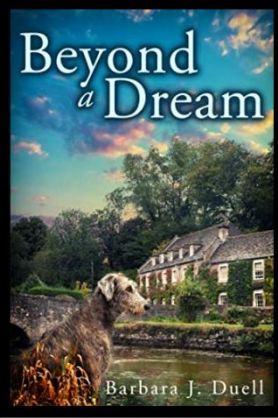

Blinded by a passion that builds each day, Neil Baker joins Mark in a journey that spans just about only to end in a final separation. Harassed by stress and doubt, he will travel halfway around the world to find her.

Caught up in her battle to save the lives of the lost and broken, he finds more, an awakening of love—a gathering of love and passion that leads to a new beginning.

Lithuanian McKenna has lived her life with the same passion and responsibility that brought her Spanish ancestors to the rich fertile land by the Pacific Ocean in search of a new life over two centuries ago.

Bound in the land, the mistress of her family and a world-renowned portrait artist, Liz has everything except someone to love her. She wants more, as rich she can't scratch, not yet, so she's put aside her dreams, for now, but someday, maybe.

Charles Phillip Adland, Earl of Ashbourne, inherited a title, a dilapidated Manor near London and nothing more, but he wants more.

He's vibrant, energetic and determined and built an empire, acquiring more wealth than he could spend in one lifetime. He has everything a human could want, yet he has nothing that truly matters.

He succeeded in business but failed miserably as a father, but soon he will have time to do better, to find and love his dream. Yes, soon.

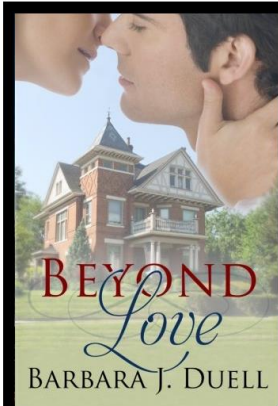

From the quiet town of San Juan Capistrano, California to a small village by the sea in Devon, England fate has set a course for two people to find themselves, even though they have no idea they are being pulled by a handful of relatives, a village of eager helpers, and one very big, hairy dog.

International best-selling author, Barbara J Duell lives in the Arizona mountains desert of Arizona with her three dogs and an imagination that keeps her up at night. Her small travel bag is always packed, just waiting to accompany her on the next trip and a new adventure.

When unhappy eight-year-old David runs away from home and into the path of a speeding car, Michael pulls him to safety, the beautiful woman with a man's face seems destined to become the mother he never had until David returns.

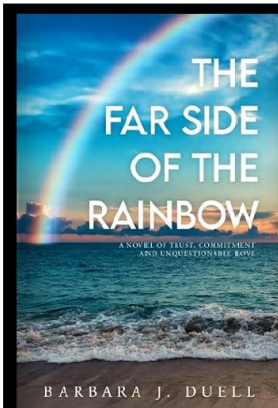

Michael McCall, a history professor and grieving the loss of his husband and son two years ago, does not normally agree, but there she is, sitting in a bright place that he needs the most and it fills the hole of his mother, who left shortly after David was born. Richard cooks, however, knows that he needs Lily and it is good to be back home as the boy's companion.

As the initial attraction between Michael and Richard grows, the odds are good, and with the good book, they go to find a happy ending for all that is as good as ever possible.

Some people believe all components of the universe are linked by hidden patterns and that the lives of one individual can bond with the lives of another, each one the protagonist of their own drama, yet linked to another. Coincidence or fate? Across space and time, four troubled souls seek to find their way.

Mackenzie Chipman, born into wealth and abandoned at birth, spent her childhood seeking validation, moving into adulthood and the financial world as an investor, extraordinarily competent and high functioning, but not someone anyone really knew. Using systematic logic to make a career long battle, she travels across the country only to have her organized life fall apart and intertwine with strangers.

In one fateful moment, the life of Oscar Peter Francis, handsome, compassionate and charismatic, hangs by a thread as he fights to live. Most of his life he spent to realize the wish list he grew up with, when once his dreams were shattered, he searched, only to be disappointed by strange disappearances for his help.

Tempest and James and his wife, Anne, are orphaned, alone and abandoned. Abused by a male tyrant that exists to protect them, clinging to each other in fear and doubt until one rainy night, fate reigns in.

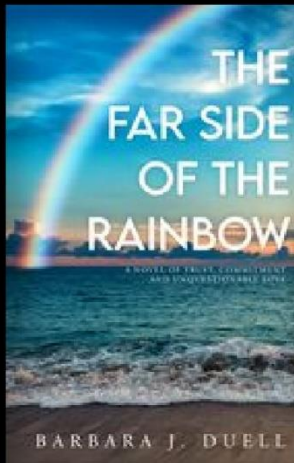

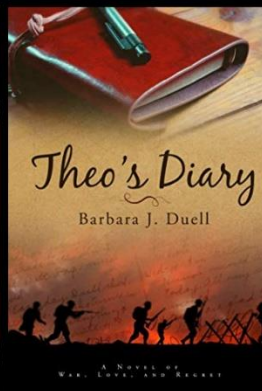

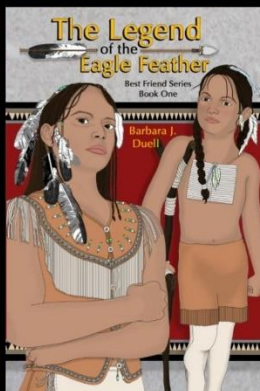

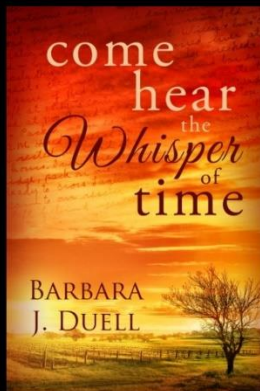

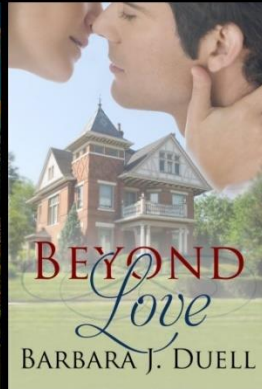

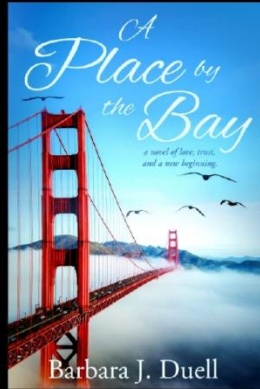

Or was it just a coincidence that an unknown person, a woman with golden hair and a gentle voice, heard their cry for help and reached out to them without thought or reason?
