Boundaries by Dave (D.M.) McGowan.

Westerns (Fiction-Detective/Bounty Hunter).

What if justice wasn't always about rules but about results?

Some men enforce the law. Others know exactly how to bend it. And then there's Bob Morgan.

In the untamed frontier of 19th-century British Columbia, justice has a price, corruption has powerful allies, and the line between right and wrong is thinner than gun smoke.

Bob Morgan is a bounty hunter, detective, and master of deception. He knows how to handle outlaws, expose corruption, and turn the worst situations into something manageable. But there's one thing you should not do...

Look too closely at his past.

BOUNDARIES by David M. McGowan is a gritty, unpredictable Western thriller where honor is tested, loyalties shift, and justice doesn't always play by the rules.

Boundaries By David M. McGowan: In 19th century British Columbia, where the promise of a new life meets a harsh and unforgiving wilderness, a man is drawn into a world of danger, crime and moral choices. As he confronts outlaw gangs, corrupt officials and the shifting loyalties of those around him, he must decide where his boundaries truly lie. Justice, survival and the future hang in the balance.

Boundaries is a gripping historical crime thriller set in the heart of 19th century British Columbia – a story of justice, survival and the cost of doing what is right.

British Columbia, Cariboo Country, 19th century, rail fence, Chilcotin range, Canadian Pacific Railroad, New Westminster, Burrard Inlet, Victoria, revolvers, Colt revolver, Honor, integrity, partners, neighbors, fraud, theft, human trafficking, Portland, acting, disguise

From the same vault that holds the work of William Johnstone, Matt Braun, Max Brand, and Louis L'Amour.

People Of The West: A Short Story Timeline by Dave (D.M.) McGowan.

Nine short pieces of fiction constructed around 170 years of North American history and interspersed at intervals by fourteen poems.

The first story is a fictional accounting of the first European to reach the Pacific coast of Canada. Following are fictional pictures of the winners and losers who became builders of North America and thus, eventually, all winners and though they didn't know it or want it, builders of what exists today.

Partners by Dave (D.M.) McGowan.

Thomas Brash is trying to escape but knows he never will. No thinking person can escape from their past. Pursuing him is the memory of the family he lost to cholera. Perhaps he believes that traveling alone in a wild, dangerous land will end all his memories; there is no doubt he wishes to be alone. Whatever his intentions the appearance of Frank Clement and the circumstances of that meeting upset those plans. Brash views Clement as an uneducated child who requires fatherly protection and guidance. Clement views Brash as a tenderfoot and can not understand how anyone who knows so little could live so long. These two loners are joined by others and they all become partners. Having achieved relative sanctuary and surrounded by civilization their wilderness past comes back to haunt them.

Homesteader: Finding Sharon by Dave (D.M.) McGowan.

Claiming your share of the so called “free” land in the rugged and wide Canadian frontier in the 1880s was a difficult, demanding task. When someone tries to run roughshod over the “nesters” increasing the workload and demands, its time to take a stand.

There is more than bad weather for Hank James to contend with as he rides in search of the land of his dreams and the woman of his heart. Portis Martin, manager of a large cattle company, has no use for the small homesteaders that have begun to pepper the area…and he isn’t afraid of using every dirty trick he knows to run them out.

And Portis had been doing a pretty good job of it until what he decides are two saddle tramps, Hank James and his partner, Harry Gilmore arrive in the area.

Hank James wants equality. Hank James wants a life-time partner.

And, damn it, he’s going to get both.

The Great Liquor War by Dave (D.M.) McGowan.

A Western Adventure.

The year is 1885. Hank James has been in Canada several months panning gold from a stream near Roswell, British Columbia. When he hears a prizefight will be held in town, he attends along with everyone for miles around. With a little help from the fight referee, he wins big betting on the fight. Having realized that the life of a miner isn't nearly as romantic or rewarding as he expected, and with advice from the policeman who helped him win money on the fight, Hank goes to Farwell to haul freight with pack horses for contractors building the transcontinental railroad.

The railroad's security, a detachment of North West Mounted Police, have maintained across the West that no liquor be allowed one mile on either side of the rail bed. Provincial authorities disagree. Hank James believes in honoring and repaying his debts, but that doesn't mean he should be involved in a war between the BC Provincial Police and the North West Mounted.

He and his partners have trouble enough running their freight business, they don't need to be caught between competing policemen. They are already stuck between Canada's transcontinental railroad people and the contractors doing the actual construction. While the police are fighting one another, who is looking for criminals, particularly those stealing Hank's horses? Despite a variety of jobs, D.M. McGowan now works as a commercial driver and lives near Mile "0" of the world-famous Alaska Highway.

His stories bring Canadian history to life. "I believe in seeing morality and societal responsibility rewarded. Too much of today's fiction seems to lead into the dark instead of the light."

Awarded 5 Stars By The Editor At Book Marketing Global Network. US and Canadian History Combined With Legends From The 1800's!

The Great Liquor War by D. M. McGowan is a western pioneering era saga that combines great story telling, true-to-life cowboy experience with US and Canadian history combined with legends from the 1800's.

The main character Hank James was born in Canada and migrated south into the US with his family after the Civil War. Hank's father headed towards Oregon in search of a farmstead while protecting his family from raids by outlaws and Indians. They made it as far as Kansas to find that the land was too dry to farm so pushed on to Oregon to find the land was too wet. With Mother Nature as their biggest obstacle and many mouths to feed young Hank James set out on his own. He settled down with his own gold mine claim near Rossland, British Columbia in 1984.

Hank wasn't afraid of hard work, but he wanted more out of life than to eke out a living on his claim. With tenacity Hank took advantage of the Transcanada Railroad, found some partners, and started his own freight business. Life should be good, but where there is industry, technology, commerce and economy, there are criminals.

Quote from page 37.

… "It didn't take a detective to know that the horse thief had played a little joke on the Provincial Police. Constable Art Hubbard was over six feet tall and probably ten pounds lighter than the one eighty mentioned in the description. Not only was he a long way from round, he was also clean shaven.

…I gave Constable Hubbard my story, ending with the recovery of the bay gelding and the description I had from Miller. "An' the fella called himself Art Hubbard," I added.

…The Constable's expression didn't change. He worked his chew around into one cheek and sent a stream of tobacco juice into the waste basket. "Feller with a sense o' humor," he noted, and then added. "It'll be one 'o Bulldog Kelley's outfit. They work out o' some of the illegal saloons t' be found back in the bush. We catch one or two of 'em every now an' then, but we can't get Kelley, an' he's the head o' the snake. I can think of one or two that might fit your description, but not a one that had a full beard. An' this fella's probably shaved by now."

…I wrote out my story, signed it, and returned to work."

Between the horse thieves, authority over liquor sales and a war between the BC Provincial Police and the North West Mounted Hank is he in over his head? Only time will tell if he makes the right choices and will he win the heart and loyalty of Sharon Dalton?

Saddle up your horse, holster your gun and join a rugged western cast of characters that will take you back to the reality and the legends of the Wild West.

The Great Liquor War by D. M. McGowan shares nuggets of history told within a great story of human experience in the Wild West.

The Making Of Jake McTavish by Dave (D.M.) McGowan.

A Western Adventure.

You Can't Hide from Yourself.

After his wife's murder Jake McTavish leaves life and goes to the wilderness, haunted by his past and determined to forget it. Four years later an attack convinces him the murder must be solved. But to solve it he must first survive.

As the lead emerges, his search for justice draws him into a dangerous journey of buried secrets, betrayal and vengeance.

In a harsh frontier world, Jake must confront the past that changed him forever. The trail leads through rugged landscapes, forgotten towns and into those in the shadows who would rather keep the truth buried.

Does he really want those answers?

Will he find answers, or will the past claim him too?

Rocky Mountains, Portage Mountain, Omineca Country, ambush, trapping, Fort. St. John, Peace River, murder, incest, investigation, Calgary and Edmonton Railroad, North West Mounted Police, Great Lakes, Trent-Severn

From the same vault that holds the work of William Johnstone, Matt Braun, Max Brand, and Louis L'Amour.

Awarded 5 Stars By The Editor At Book Marketing Global Network. 1800's Western Pioneering Era Saga!

The Making of Jake McTavish by D. M. McGowan is an 1800's western pioneering era saga that combines exceptional story telling with an historical tale told by Peace Country pioneer John Brown.

Well-developed characters and true to life settings with descriptive writing put the reader into the story. The main character Jake McTavish stands alone in his empty cabin with his thoughts that he voiced to his blue tick hound, "Maybe I'll just have t'shoot somebody. That way the government will have t' feed us 'til they punch my ticket and bury me."

Life had been especially hard since the murder of his wife. For the fourth year he must continue his Peace River trek in British Columbia (1898) to take the furs that he had collected by canoe down to Ft. St John. This is an important ritual as Jake trades bails of skins for cash to pay for supplies and to repair equipment heading into the new season. Times were hard enough without the ambush that knocked him out cold and took most of everything that he had in his camp.

Just 11 years ago "in the spring of 1887 Jake became a wealthy saddle tramp. He only had fourteen Canadian dollars, two U.S. dollars and eighty-six cents, but he was rich in other goods. He had four horses, a fine, double rigged saddle, a short-barrelled Colt pistol, a Colt Navy .36 and a Winchester rifle. He also had a serviceable pack saddle, bed roll, enough food to last a month and the pack covered with two tarps."

By 1889 Jake had spent two years with the Cambridge Cattle Company and had accumulated some money. With a deep yearning for something more and the passing of the Canadian Homestead Act, Jake chose three hundred and twenty isolated acres in the foothills north of the Rocky Mountains. In the fall of 1891 with 15 yearlings to sell he met Anna Porenski. When she married him, he no longer felt driven, because he had it all. Anna was raised on a farm, so ranch life came easy to her and she enjoyed gardening. The only thing missing are children for fate has refused to grant Jake and wife Anna a baby. To end such dreams Anna is murdered and the responding Mounted Policeman comes close to accusing Jake."

Travel with Jake McTavish on a journey to find Anna's killer or killers.

The Making of Jake McTavish by D. M. McGowan for the author's incredible story telling of Jake McTavish. I invite you to also read: The Great Liquor War, Homesteader: Finding Sharon and Partners. D. M. McGowan tells us that Cattle Business is coming soon.

Gunfighters, Thieves and Lawmen by Dave (D.M.) McGowan.

Sully Wheeler doesn't care why his cattle are disappearing. He doesn't care why but it has to stop. Perhaps it's part of the cost of hiding from his past, but who would steal from a one-time gunfighter? The North West Mounted Policeman that Sully contacted appeared more intent on stopping vigilante action than in stopping theft. If that proves to be the case, Sully will recover his own property, even if it takes gunfire to do it. Who is this Mountie, anyway? Is he a cop or something else entirely? Is he working to support the crown, leave the crown or actually do something for the settlers? And while we're talking about that Mountie, isn't he spending too much time with that newspaper lady from the Bulletin?

From The Author: Gunfighters, Thieves and Lawmen was an opportunity to extend a character first introduces in "Homesteader: Finding Sharon" and the months long chase of the fugitive "Almighty Voice" and his eventual death. I had just barely started and realized it was also a chance to mention some of the changes in the North West Mounted Police during the first thirteen years of their existence.

I forced myself into a slight change of direction and tension and to introduce a break to the narrative I introduced a "Dominion Day" parade. This gave me a chance to introduce some of the farming equipment of the day.

About The Author: David M, McGowan (Dave) has been a cowboy, forest fire fighter, heavy equipment operator, farmhand, gardener, road musician, businessman and commercial driver. He is also a Great-Grandfather, husband, Freemason and Shriner. He is now retired and lives and writes in Northern British Columbia.

Into The Mountains by Dave (D.M.) McGowan.

How do you save your family when they are faced with hate and racism on all sides? How do you avoid fear every minute of every day?

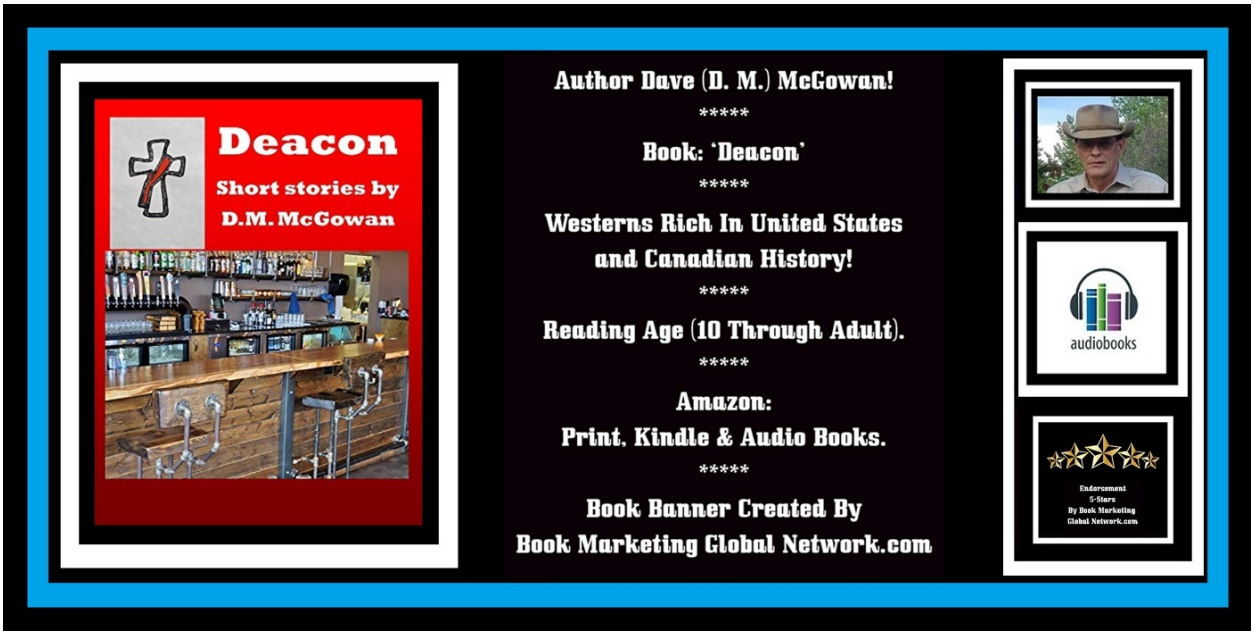

In the years following the North West Rebellion of 1885 many Métis "disappeared" as many went into hiding to avoid racism and mistreatment. Admittedly, some like Gabriel Dumont went south of the 49th parallel into the US. What happened to the rest?

Almost a century later Métis suddenly appeared as individuals and communities throughout the West. Perhaps "Into the Mountains", fiction though it is, supplies some explanation.

Deacon by Dave (D.M.) McGowan.

Marker of Stone; A fictional recounting of the first European to reach the Pacific Ocean north of Mexico. Was his reception by the local population as he described it in his journal. Perhaps they put up with him hoping he would leave? Another possibility is that they controlled their desire to ensure the strange men left their land.

- #communication #control #protection
- Deacon; A young Canadian and several young American southerners, all fighter pilots and their experiences in 1940 during the Battle of Britain.
- #WWII #fear #bombs #English pubs
- Includes three rhymes about history, interaction with others and the molding of youth

What We Need Is A Good Cow Dog by David McGowan.

Do you regret that?

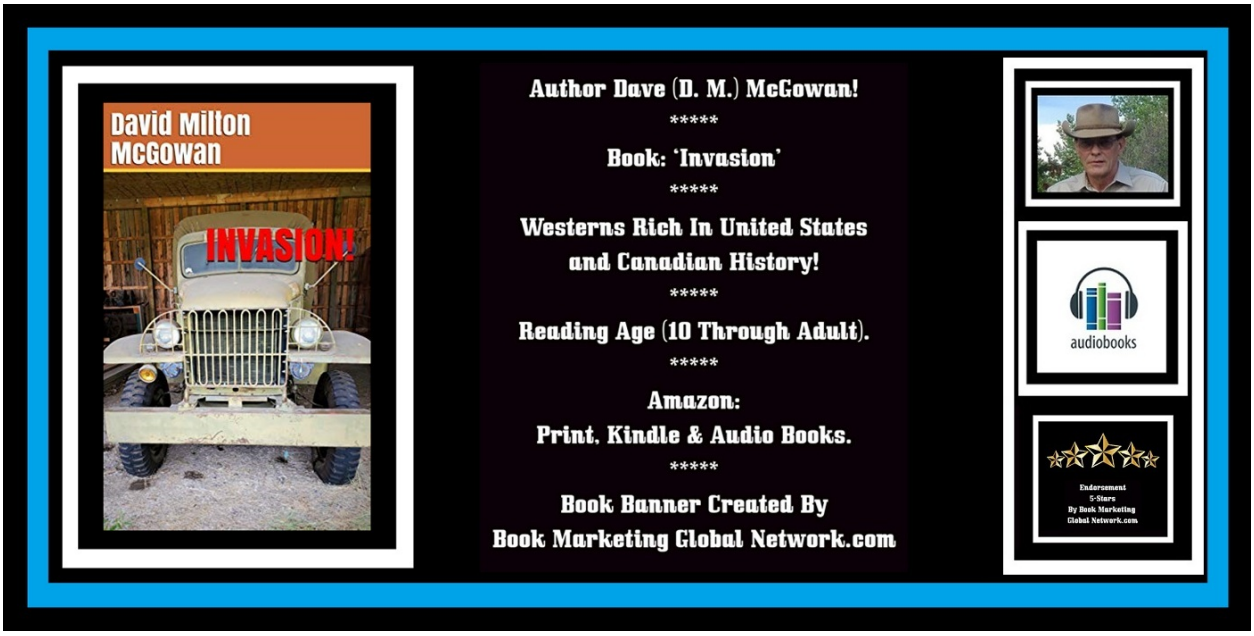

Sometimes you might say something to a friend that you regret, however it seemed like a good idea at the time. Perhaps it was funny, true and had to be said, or just your effort to lighten the mood and explain that it wasn't a life and death matter but could be if present efforts continue.

Yes, you regret it, but now it is your turn to relax and stop worrying about it. If this other person was a true friend, they should look back on it all, realize eventually the humour in the situation and laugh along with you.

Invasion by David Milton McGowan.

INVASION!

They lived "off the grid" because in those days and in that area, there was no "grid" to be on. They were homesteaders, farmers, and trappers who might find a dozen people within a day's walk in any direction.

Suddenly they were surrounded by10, 000 strangers, almost all men and trading for goods they had not known existed.

It was 1942 and the Alaska Highway was being built through 1200 miles of wilderness.

Their system of life, the society they knew was gone with the arrival of one train in Dawson Creek. There were hundreds of more loaded freights scheduled to arrive in a town that might see half a dozen during the fall harvest.

What will happen to these people?

About The Author: Author Dave McGowan has been a cowboy, forest fire fighter, heavy equipment operator, farmhand, gardener, road musician and businessman. He now writes, and works as a commercial driver, in Northern British Columbia.

The forgoing is the bio from the back of my novels, and one might conclude from this information that I was a poor employee … either lazy or didn't know what I was doing … and was kicked off a lot of jobs. You would be partially correct, at least in surmising that I don't know what I am doing. As for my being a poor employee, you would have to ask my bosses … although I think I've managed to trick the one I have now.

Of course, when I had my own business, my boss thought I was marvelous.

Truthfully, I've managed over the years to find employment regardless of my location or the problems that might exist with the economy. I enjoyed much of that experience at the time and am glad that I attained it.

I've also visited a good portion of North America and lived in several areas of Canada where I met some great people and enjoyed some wonderful country.

Speaking of great people, Karen and I are parents to four great people who have supplied eight grandchildren who show that improvements can be possible in each generation. One of those has added a great-granddaughter to the line.

In addition, be aware that I have 3 repackages of short stories and poems or rhymes at
